

Disclaimer:

International Bird Rescue Research Center provides training and internship opportunities to a variety of people during live spill responses, at IBRRC rehabilitation clinics in California and during specific on-site trainings. IBRRC provides skills-based training in capture, handling, basic medical techniques and rehabilitation of wild, aquatic animals. This training is intended to help develop individual skills in the field of rehabilitation and basic medical care, which is the foundation of oiled wildlife rehabilitation. IBRRC training does not include training in emergency management, hazardous materials, incident command or logistics and IBRRC assumes no liability or responsibility for the technical abilities of individuals completing these trainings.

Individuals completing an internship, training or in-house work program with IBRRC are not necessarily qualify to work independently in the field of oiled wildlife response. IBRRC does not authorize or certify that these individuals have reached any level of competency in the field of oiled wildlife response.

Further, IBRRC does not lend the company name to other entities or accredit other organizations or individuals in the field of oiled wildlife rescue, rehabilitation or spill response.
